Construction crews install new waterline on W. Cantey Street for the fashion merchandising building.

Students get creative navigating the east side of campus

BY RICHARD EDGEMON

SKIFF EXECUTIVE EDITOR

When students left for summer break, construction on the east side of campus was just beginning with the clearing of land behind Moudy North.

Now students can see two story tall support beams where an empty field was four months ago.

Those construction beams are the skeleton for the new fashion merchandising building that will be a part of the new creative commons.

The creative commons will include the new fashion building, Moudy North, Moudy South and the new music building and have several walking paths and green space.

To construct the design as planned, the layout of the east side of campus needed to be changed.

Last semester the parking lot behind Brite Divinity School was closed, as it will be the location of the new music building.

Half of a new parking lot was opened this week on Merida Avenue to accommodate commuter students. The rest of the spaces will be available by September.

In addition to the parking lot, sections of several roads will be closed for this project, some permanently and others just temporarily.

According to documents provided by TCU, sections of Princeton Street and Greene Avenue will be closed in late August after crews complete the construction work on W. Lowden Street and pour the concrete for the new fire lane that will run behind the divinity school and connect Princeton to Lowden.

On the other side of the Moudy buildings, construction crews have closed off W. Cantey street while they install a new water line for the fashion and merchandising building. That work is scheduled to be completed by September.

While not part of the creative commons, construction for the new building for the Neeley School of Business is being continues.

exterior masonry and glass, putting up drywall and installing in-wall electrical, plumbing and mechanical pipes and ductwork, project manager Brooke Ruesch said. The crane on the construction site is scheduled to be taken down this weekend.

The new fashion merchandising building and the Neely building are scheduled to be completed in fall and December of 2019, respectively. The new music building is scheduled to be completed by 2020.

Looking around her office with several full bookshelves lining the walls, the new dean of the school of interdisciplinary studies still feels like she is missing half of her library.

This semester, the school of Interdisciplinary studies (SIS) starts its inaugural year after the approval from Chancellor Victor Boschini and campus administration, appointing Dr. Karen Steele as the dean for SIS and as associate vice provost.

Steele was the chair of the English Department until two weeks ago, when she moved to her office on the third floor of Rees-Jones Hall.

Steele earned a doctorate in English literature, specializing in ethnic and the literature of developing nations, specifically Irish literature.

“My speciality in Irish and ethnic literature has always been considered interdisciplinary studies, so it’s been around for a while,” Steele said. “What’s changing is how people are perceiving interdisciplinary studies.

“The biggest problems we face like climate change or global inequality can’t be answered from one discipline expertise,” Steele said. “We have to build bridges from one expert to another and bridges with the community to get real

SIS currently house the departments of comparative race and ethnic studies (CRES), women and gender studies (WGST), the Intensive English Program and the Department of Ranch Management.

Steele said that both CRES and WGST “model the best practices for the campus in terms of teaching and research around diversity, equity and inclusion.”

Diversity and inclusion are issues Steele said she cares deeply about, serving as the the co-chair of diversity, equity and inclusion committee and the academic profile and reputation committee for the camps Lead on campaign.

The school will also oversee the Idea factory, which provides entrepreneurial training for those not affiliated with the Neeley School of Business, and FrogFolio programs.

Summer sports roundup

BY BENTON MCDONALD

TCU Athletics didn't take a break this summer. Here's what you may have missed.

Football

Last season's Defensive Newcomer of the Year, senior defensive end Ben Banogu, was named the Big 12 Preseason Defensive Player of the Year. Banogu's 8.5 sacks was second in the conference and he led TCU in tackles for loss with 16.5 sacks. The sixteenth-ranked Horned Frogs opened practice Aug. 2 when head coach Gary Patterson introduced the team's mantra for the season, "Own the Process." Patterson announced that former quarterback Kenny Hill will return to TCU as a student coach while he finishes his degree.

Women's Basketball

The Frogs advanced to the WNIT semifinals with 23 victories, their most since 2007. Following her most successful campaign with the Horned Frogs, TCU women's basketball head coach Raegan Pebley was awarded a two-year extension, keeping her in Fort Worth through the 2022-23 season. The team added transfer guard Jaycee Bradley and assistant coach Abi Olajuwon. Bradley transferred to TCU from the University of South Dakota and will sit out the 2018-19 season. Olajuwon spent the last two seasons at Eastern Michigan University and serves as TCU's recruiting coordinator.

Baseball

The TCU baseball team saw five players selected in the 2018 MLB Draft, including a second round pick of junior first baseman Luken Baker by the St. Louis Cardinals. Junior closer Durbin Feltman, junior pitcher Sean Wymer, junior left fielder Josh Watson and junior Jared Janczak were also drafted but Watson and Janczak decided to return to TCU for their senior campaigns. Fine Arts has a new interim dean

BY RICHARD EDGEMON
EXECUTIVE EDITOR

Dr. Richard Gipson, formerly the director of the School of Music, was appointed as the interim dean for the College of Fine Arts in June after Dr. Anne Helmreich left TCU for the Getty Research Institute.

“The transition has been intense,” Gipson said. But his relaxed demeanor, full bookshelves and lack of any significant clutter would suggest otherwise.

Gipson’s experience

as the director of music for both TCU and the University of Oklahoma has prepared him for the administrative portion of his new position, but the construction projects have been the largest hurdles.

As music director for TCU, Gipson had been involved with the construction of the new music building since the initiative began in spring of 2015.

As the dean of fine arts, he has to be knowledgeable about the entire creative commons project, including the new fashion merchandising building.

Gipson said coming up to speed on the new building has been challenging, but the bi-weekly construction meetings have updates on the entire project.

“It’s been fast and furious,” Gipson said, “picking up the initiatives and balls from this job and handing over all of the ones across the street and not having anything get dropped.”

Across the street in Ed Landreth Hall, the transition is being managed by Kristen

Queen, the interim director of the music school.

Queen said juggling her new responsibilities has resulted in some long days, but she was grateful for the amount of record-keeping left by Gipson.

Abbey Widick shares her plans for student government

By MICHAEL ROGERS

This year's student body president wants to improve communication between the Student Government Association (SGA) and students and provide resources for sexual assault survivors.

Senior Abbey Widick won the SGA presidential election last spring with 67 percent of the vote over her competitor and SGA parliamentarian, Laredo Loyd, who received 31 percent.

"The most important sign of a successful presidency is a successful student government," Widick said. "It is empowering leaders to work on their own projects. If I look at it like it's just me or just success in my projects, I think

The connection and empowerment aspect of leading the student body is something former student body president Ben Taylor said he made sure to address in welcoming Widick into the position.

"The best part about TCU is the community," Taylor said. "You have to be a good listener and make people be heard, valued and engaged. You have to make people a part of this family."

Widick said she wants to open communication between the student body and their elected leaders through a Campus Climate Advisory Board.

"This will be a direct line of communication that I can consult leaders for," Widick said. "That way before anyone on we can run this by and say 'Hey, how would this decision affect your organization or your friend group?'"

Widick said the new advisory board will help student body leaders determine what problems students face on campus, what is going well and what needs to be addressed.

One of Widick's main concerns is sexual assault.

Widick worked with TCU's ongoing sexual assault prevention and awareness campaign, 'It's on Us' last semester.

Since the campaign's implementation, Widick said the program has led to an increase in reports of sexual assault to campus officials.

School of Music chooses new interim director

BY RICHARD EDGEMON
EXECUTIVE EDITOR

Among the changes to Horned Frog faculty that occurred over the summer is the appointment of a new director to the School of Music

Kristen Queen has been appointed the interim director of the music school after the former director, Dr. Richard Gipson, accepted the position of dean for the College of Fine Arts in June.

“The shift happened very quickly,” Queen said. No one has been hired to fill her former position as assistant director of academic programs for the music school. A replacement for that position should be announced in the coming weeks.

Queen, who is currently working on her doctorate in education at TCU, said adjusting to her new office and figuring out her rhythm has taken longer than she hoped.

“Not having your physical space to not be exactly where you want it along with your virtual space makes it feel like cacophony or mixed meter,” Queen said.

“It’s forced me to be more reactive rather than proactive, but being with the music department and around campus for a while allows me to predict some of the issues or events ahead and plan those out,” Queen said.

Part of her proactive strategy is to create an environment in which students and faculty members can talk with her about any problem, something she has carried over from her previous role.

“When you’re open and available that’s when you know what’s going on and you can start to make intelligent and informed decisions about here’s what’s working well, here’s where I’d like to see us go and how do I connect that,” Queen said. “What are the dreams of the faculty? What are the dreams of the students? And how do I combine those?”

While Queen plans on keeping her open door policy, she said that since she has accepted the position she has had to say “no” to people more than she would like.

“When you’re open and available that’s when you know what’s going on and you can start to make intelligent and informed decisions...”

THE MICHAEL R. FERRARI AWARD

for Distinguished University Service and Leadership

Improving Interdisciplinary Education

Dr. Gaul has transformed TCU's Women & Gender Studies program since she became director in 2012. Historically, the WGST program faced limited engagement and visibility; to address the issue, Dr. Gaul organized the first program review and implemented many of its recommendations. During her tenure, the WGST program has added programming, increased student enrollment, attracted new affiliated faculty, and boosted the campus, local and national visibility. She has also been a core driver in the program, submitting to start a major in fall 2018. Dr. Gaul has worked tirelessly with many campus constituents to make sure the major and the program itself are interdisciplinary and collaborative endeavors. She is not one to take the spotlight, but on behalf of the Horned Frog Family, thank you, Dr. Gaul, for enriching the campus culture for all TCU students.

TCU nearly finished with preparing for new administration building

BY RICHARD EDGEMON
EXECUTIVE EDITOR

By February 2019, construction for the new administration building along W. Berry Street from Stadium Drive to Rogers Avenue will begin if everything stays on schedule.

Since students left for summer break, new water and sewer lines were installed on Berry Street.

The construction, which is almost complete, caused parts of Berry Street to be closed as crews worked on Stadium and University drives, shrinking Berry to one lane going each way at its peak.

With the waterline project wrapping up, the project is now shifting to work on other utilities like electricity.

Bellaire Drive has been reduced to a one-way road going east as backhoes rip up half of the asphalt.

Brooke Ruesch, the project manager, said the construction along Bellaire “will allow us to move all of the overhead power lines underground to clear out the space required.”

After the construction on Bellaire is completed, the process will be repeated along Rogers and Berry.

“All of these activities are considered ‘make ready’ for us to be able to start construction by the first of February,” Ruesch said.

School splits into two departments

BY RICHARD EDGEMON
EXECUTIVE EDITOR

The School of Geology, Energy and the Environment will split into the departments of geological sciences and environmental science starting this September.

The announcement was made in late June by Provost Nowell Donovan, who is a faculty member for the school.

The two departments were originally divided and were combined in 2009 but have decided to separate as programs like environmental science have grown over the last semesters.

Dr. Art Busbey will serve as the chair of the geological sciences, and Dr. Mike Slattery will serve as the chair of the environmental sciences department.

"The shift has mainly been programmatic," Slattery said. "It was time for these programs to be distinct."

While the departments may be separating, Slattery said that "we're not taking our ball and going home. The two departments will continue to work side by side, just with two budgets rather than sharing one."

Students who are in that college do not have to change their class catalog, Slattery said. All of the changes are being done on the administrative level.

"It's been a pretty clean split," Slattery said.

for Thursday, Aug. 23, 2018:

This year you have the energy to create much more of what you want and need. You won't tolerate being passive or not being in the position you desire. Life and excitement walk hand in hand. If you are single, you could meet someone once fall arrives. You alone can decide if this person is right for you. If you are attached, the two of you might get into arguments more often. Don't make a big deal out of anything small. AQUARIUS gives you great advice.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

★★★★ You express a practical side of your personality. You will approach many different people and projects with this attitude. You have passion and strength working for you, so be sure to use them wisely. Tonight: No one will try to stop you now.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

★★★★ As you see a surprise head down your path, you'll want to let others participate in what is happening. Confusion could be the outcome, but sharing this experience might be more important than you know. Your sense of humor will kick in. Tonight: Listen well.

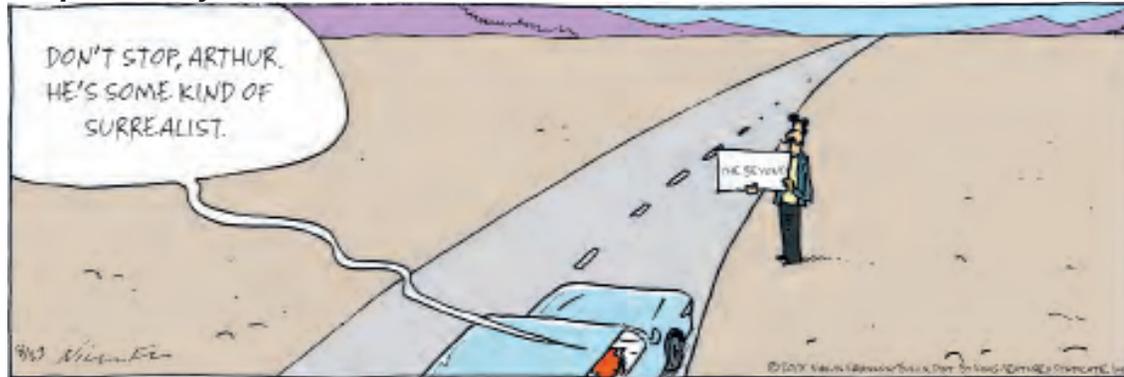

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

★★★ You might become picky to the point of being cranky, if you are not careful. You understand your limits. Despite this, a perfectionist streak within you sets off a problem. A family member or domestic issue needs your consideration. Tonight: Time to relax.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

★★★ You will communicate what is on your mind. Some people might not hear your words, but others listen. You could be tired of a partner's combative attitude, and you'll let him or her know in no uncertain terms. Tonight: Listen carefully to a loved one.

Carpe Diem by Niklas Eriksson

Dustin by Steve Kelley and Jeff Parker

Intelligent Life by David Reddick

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

★★★★ You could be at the end of your fuse. How you handle a difficult associate could determine just how volatile this situation becomes. Rest assured that you are coming from a more stable position. You also might have more control. Tonight: Kick up your heels.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

★★★★ Yo By midday, you sense a change in your energy levels and also in your perspective. You suddenly feel more upbeat and as if you can handle whatever heads your way. Great ideas often arise when you feel this way. Tonight: Join a friend for dinner and drinks.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

★★★★★ Your more playful side emerges. A loved one can't seem to get enough of you. This person could be unusually demonstrative right now, mainly because he or she wants your attention. A partner could act out in an unexpected way. Tonight: Accept an offer.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

★★★ Communication might be a high priority in the morning, but by the afternoon, anything is possible. A loved one makes an offer that you can't say "no" to, nor do you want to. Optimism surrounds a pertinent situation. Tonight: Head home with favorite treat.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

★★★★ You could be more upbeat than you have been, and finally might be ready to make a change. A conversation encourages you to follow your heart. A friend feels that excellence lies with this independence. Communicate clearly. Tonight: Catch up on news.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

★★ You could be more out of whack than you think. For instance, you might have a hard time getting someone's attention. You feel less appreciated than you did a few days ago. Know that this, too, will pass. Tonight: Run some errands on the way home.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

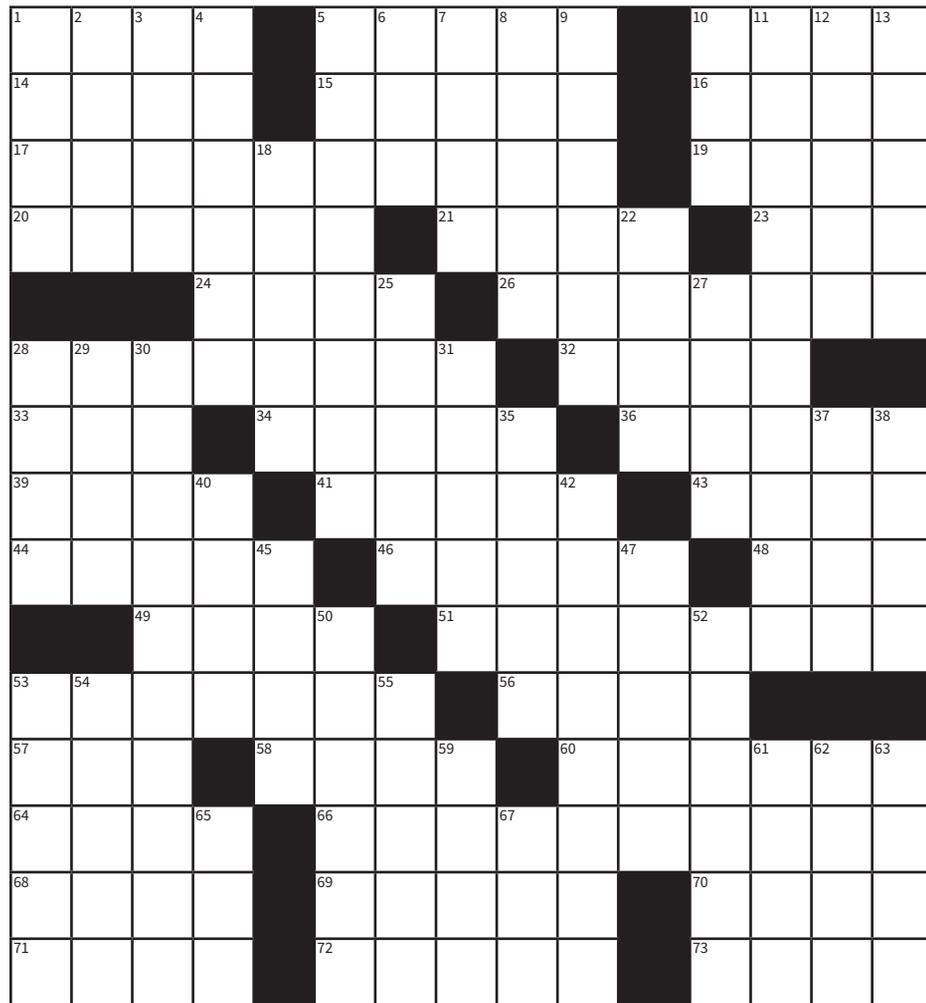

★★★★ You feel empowered. As a result, no one will try to push to have his or her way for long. Go for what you want, and do not allow a family member to throw off your plans. Your lively ways make all the difference in what occurs. Tonight: Play it cool and calm.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

★★★ Your smile is contagious and draws others toward you. Understand that you could be a bit out of sync. Allow timing to work in your favor. You will get what you want, but not right this second. Exciting news heads your way. Tonight: Hang out at a favorite place.

TCU TRIVIA ANSWER

MOVING OFF CAMPUS? 5 TIPS TO GET YOU READY!

One of the most exciting times for Sophomores and Juniors is figuring out off-campus housing! Don't wait for a housing lottery. These 5 tips will help you find your perfect rental property.

1. START EARLY

No one wants to be left behind and the best options go fast. Ask older friends where they live. And, start forming your group that wants to live together.

▶▶ 90% of students surveyed rank walkability to campus as their number one factor in where to live off-campus.

2. SCHEDULE A TOUR

Schedule a tour of a home with your whole group. It makes it easier to make a decision together. Look at bedroom sizes. Ask at the tour: who takes care of repairs; how long does it take to get things fixed; do you accept online, individual rent payments?

▶▶ Leases with 6 or more people are illegal and can be cancelled by the City of Fort Worth.

3. HOW FAR IS TOO FAR?

Fort Worth is a big city, with rentals near Trinity River and W. 7th. But those locations require driving to school -- do you want to deal with parking everyday? TCU was designed as a walkable campus, because it means more involvement.

▶▶ General rule: 1-2 blocks = walking. 3+ blocks = driving.

4. PRIORITIZE

Besides location, consider other factors: quality of home, parking, price, furnished or unfurnished. Like choosing a college, prioritize what is important over the long term, since many students live in the same home for their Junior and Senior years.

5. TALK TO PARENTS

Parents aren't required to start your housing search, but your Social Security number is needed for rental applications and money for the security deposit. Some landlords require parents to sign the lease.

▶▶ Lease starts June → lease ends near graduation.
▶▶ Lease starts Aug → lease ends 2 months post-graduation.
